THE GAYETIES AND ACTIVITIES OF THE WEEK

The Old Beau.

No love-lorn tale have I to tell, No story rapture tinged; I've been a foolish moth and-well,

I've many times been singed; But ne'er a flame I've called a bane, Nor been by burning vexed-I let my wings grow out again

And buzz around the next! I've pressed the first love kiss on lips Since kissed-how many times! With love squeezed many finger tips, And woven names in rhymes. The sweet young buds of womanhood I've schooled in love, and then Obligingly aside have stood

While they wed other men! The girls I've woodd-'tis said, And very truly, "Fools rush in Where angels fear to tread."

And yet I'm with the course of things Contented more than wroth, For, though I often singe my wings,

The Very Latest.

Washington Post.

-The Smart Set.

A young man and a younger woman came out of a Sixteenth-street house evidently in progress one pleasant afternoon last week and strolled down the street together. She was wearing a smart gown, the design of whose front had evidently pleased the modiste immensely for she had made the back precisely like it. He was almost wholly obscured in one of those newly-fashioned coats which make a brother's clothes. They were both extremely up to date, and there was that in their manner which conveyed the impression that they knew it and gloried in it. As they turned into the street he held out one gloved hand and she let hers fall into it, and as far as I followed them they went hand in hand, swinging their arms after the heretofore derided manner of rural lovers. I recognized them as a newmarveling eyes I realized that their linked hands must be in accord with some whim of fashion. It may be-and I am told it hand in hand, and doubtless before the winter is over we shall see whole processions of people thus advertising their mu-

A Little Too Smart.

Philadelphia Record. The friends of a West Philadelphia couple who were married one day last week are chuckling over the outcome of a plot hatched by the foxy bridegroom that worked the wrong way. When they started | lumbia, S. C. on their wedding trip their destination was kept a profound secret, but a false scent was given out that they were to leave the Baltimore & Ohio depot at Twenty-fourth and Chestnut streets. Instead of that they went to the Reading Terminal, and in order to further baffle their tormentors, in case any should be on their track, they went to the Terminal in separate carriages and by different routes, and so elaborate were their plans that they even boarded different cars. The groom went into the smoker, and the bride took a seat in a parlor car. Unfortunately, she got on the wrong train, and while he was being whirled away to, New York she found herself on a train bound for Pottsville. Each got off at the first stop and returned to Philadelphia. where a fresh start was made. In spite of all they could do the story leaked out, and their friends are eagerly awaiting their re-

Two Girls and Their Ways.

Philadelphia Telegraph. A girl sat in a Sixteenth-street parlor. She had been waiting there many nights wondering if he would come.

She had sent him violet-scented notes of invitations, many of them. When he had nothing else to do he came. She rushed to the door to let him in. She told him how glad she was to see him, how she had been waiting for him. He sat through the evening listless and indifferent. When he went out he thought "What a bore she is." She cried herself to sleep.

Another girl sat in a Fifteenth-street parlor. She wasn't waiting. She had sent an unscented, indifferent note: "Don't come to-night. I am going out with Tom Scott." Tortured with jealousy, he came the next night at the earliest permissible moment. She did not rush to the door. She was politely pleasant. He went away, chewing the end of his cigar furiously and thinking, She knew men.
